

I am writing to the FCC to express my favor in keeping our standard Net Neutrality Laws. The repeal of such laws would not only hurt business, expansion and growth of the economy as well as innovation and creation. This proceeding will affect millions of Americans who rely on the internet as a tool and necessary utility in every day life. The retraction of these laws, which guarantees freedom and expression for anyone and everyone to use the internet, could have devastating consequences to a society that has spent years building itself up on the basis of Net Neutrality. It is immoral and unethical to allow large corporations to dictate and allow what a person may or may not see, as well as to give up every aspect of privacy in favor of making a profit. The removal of these laws, a basic human right in this day and age, would be an act of exploitation on American citizens.

Large corporations have no right to obtain such power over something as important and widely used as the internet. It is a power that will be sorely abused and taken advantage of, and it will ultimately hurt the country. To repeal these laws will be an act to take our freedom.

I thoroughly resist the removal of the current regulations for Net Neutrality on December 14, 2017.
